Perimenopause Brain Fog and Sleep Guide

A seven-night reset for sleep disruption, fog, and next-day recovery

When sleep falls apart, the next day often becomes brain fog, irritability, and low energy.

This guide helps you track what happened at night and what showed up the next day.

What to log at night

- Bedtime, wake time, and night waking
- Temperature swings, hot flashes, or night sweats
- Alcohol, caffeine, sugar, and late meals
- Stress level and screen use before bed

The seven-night reset

- Night 1: observe your normal pattern
- Night 2: cool the room and lower light earlier
- Night 3: move caffeine earlier
- Night 4: make dinner lighter and earlier
- Night 5: lengthen the wind-down
- Night 6: keep wake time steady
- Night 7: review what helped most

Next-day recovery page

- Track word-finding, memory, patience, and focus
- Write what support would make tomorrow easier
- Keep notes for provider follow-up if sleep remains poor
