Perimenopause Morning Routine for Fatigue and Focus

A 14-day reset for hydration, light movement, food, and calmer mornings

This guide gives you a practical way to start the day when you wake up tired, foggy, or behind.

You do not need a perfect routine. You need one that happens.

Your 20-minute anchor routine

- Drink water before caffeine
- Open curtains or step outside for morning light
- Take five slow breaths with a longer exhale
- Do two to ten minutes of gentle movement
- Pick one main focus for the day
- Choose a simple breakfast that supports steadier energy

14-day progression

- Days 1 to 3: hydration, light, and breathing
- Days 4 to 6: add movement
- Days 7 to 10: add food and planning structure
- Days 11 to 14: keep what helps and cut what drags

Backup plan for rough mornings

- Use the two-minute version instead of skipping the whole routine
- Prep water, clothes, and breakfast the night before
- Keep the first task small and specific
